Apprenticeships combine practical training in a job with study. As an Apprentice you'll be working alongside experienced staff, gaining job-specific skills, earning a wage and getting holiday pay along with studying towards a related qualification.

IT Support is the lifeline of most businesses and if you're an avid problem solver and a lover of tech then this is the pathway for you.

You can get ahead of your friends by taking the IT Support Apprenticeship pathway. While your friends are at university, you could be earning up to £1,000 per month and learning. You will learn everything you need to know about the industry with well-respected qualifications gained at the end of the programme.

They don't teach you this in school or university

If IT is the industry you would like to break into, then qualifications from Microsoft, CompTIA, CIW and CISCO will be the fast track into your career.

A lot of the time the teaching from university is outdated by the time of graduation. There's no better way to keep up with technology trends than what you'll learn working with a great employer in London.

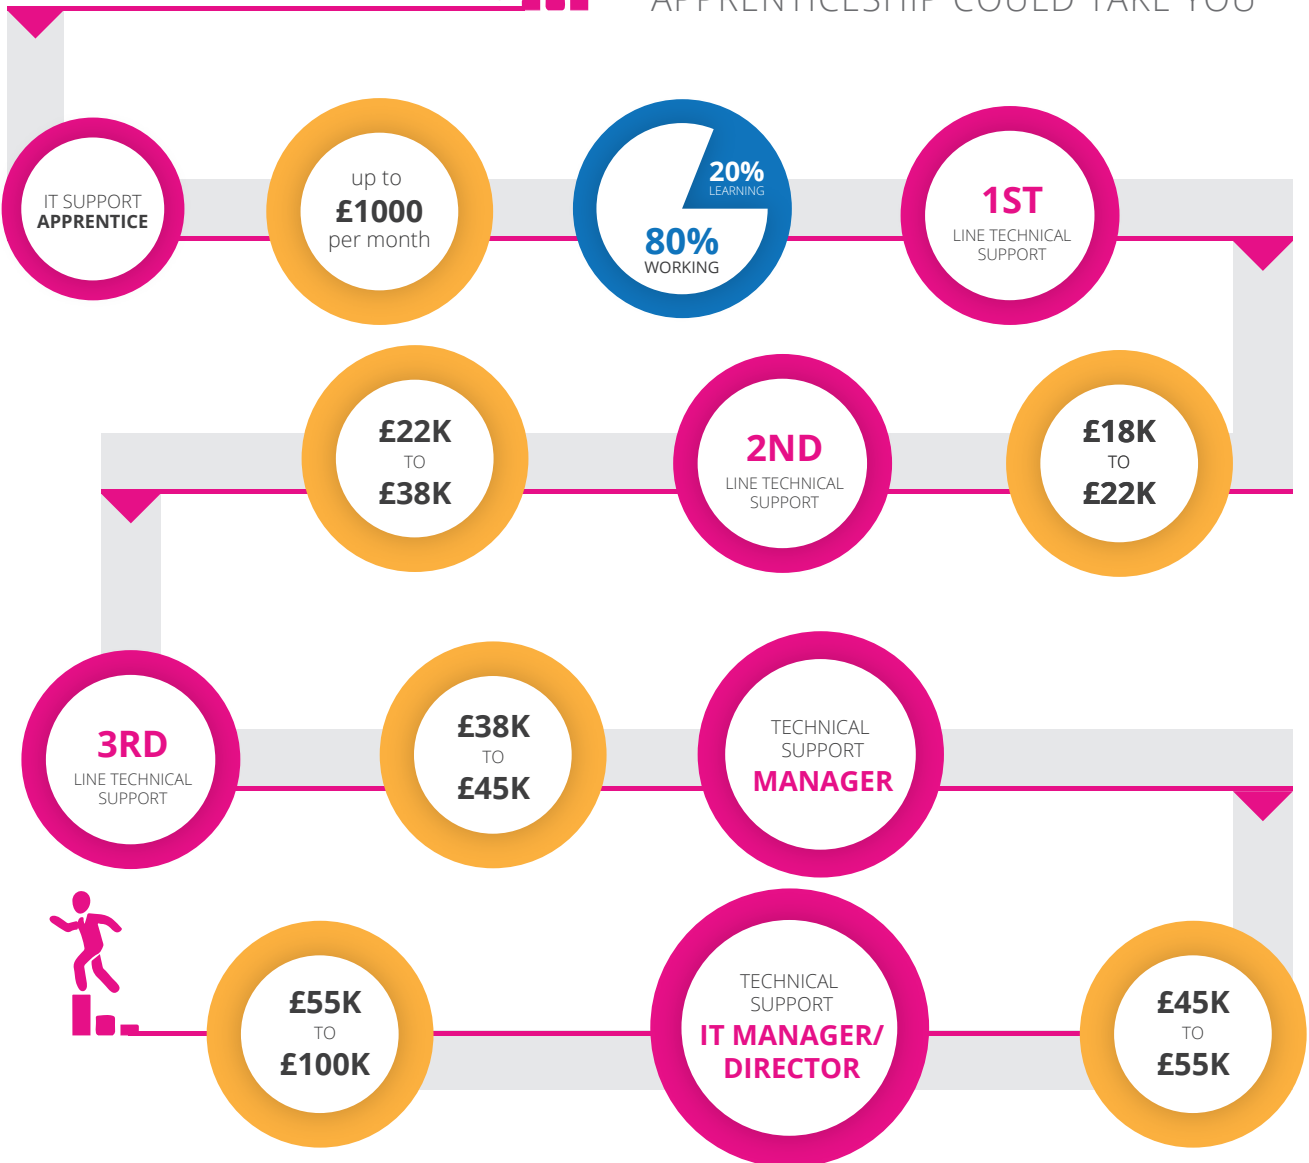

IT Support and Networking is needed by all employers; large and small. You could work in the financial world, legal, media, education and many more.

“I enjoy facing challenges every day and there are so many different pathways in IT. The Apprenticeship has given me hands-on experience and most companies look at experience rather than certifications. I've matured a lot and know what I want to do”

Javier Damas - Herbert Smith Freehills

“The Apprenticeship is a kick-start and it has helped me get my foot in the door. I have learned a lot on the job. I have gained a lot of experience and it's been great working with professionals – I have had these people supporting me from day one”

Amrita Singh - DSP

“University graduates are going to come out with experience in Windows 7, when our software is already two times ahead.”

Alex Briscariu - Capital Capture
